

AMIE ROWE, Ph.D. SENIOR CONSULTANT

Amie has a deep understanding and appreciation for the crucial role of human capital in organizations. As a trusted partner and advisor, she brings a fresh perspective to provide insight and guidance to address the tough issues faced by business leaders in today's challenging, ever-changing global marketplace. Her expertise is grounded in a 20-year tenure as a leadership consultant, executive coach, business executive and board member. Trained as an Industrial/Organizational psychologist, she brings both business acumen and professional psychological expertise to her clientele.

She enjoys working on all sides of the client engagement, including business development, designing and developing innovative solutions, delivering services, and enhancing ongoing client relationships. She has consulted with organizations in the U.S. and internationally. Her work spans multiple industries, including healthcare, energy, consumer products, financial services, pharma, manufacturing, private equity and non-profit.

Amie received her Bachelor of Arts in Business and Psychology from Concordia University. She completed her M.A. and Ph.D. in Industrial/Organizational Psychology from Texas A&M University. Her diverse career has allowed her to develop expertise in the areas of executive selection and coaching, leadership and high-potential talent development, team coaching, culture assessment and organizational change management.

Originally from Michigan, Amie's career has led her to live in some of America's greatest cities, including Dallas, Chicago, San Diego and Los Angeles. She now resides near Detroit with her two teenage sons. She is a world champion equestrian and competes nationally with her American Saddlebreds. She is also an avid world traveler and most loves exploring unique and less-traveled destinations around the globe.

“The best way to predict the future is to create it.”
- Peter Drucker